Lecturer: Dr Michael Douglas-Scott

Based in Venice throughout, where all three painters were based for much of their lives.

An excursion to see Palladio's Villa Barbaro at Maser, with superb frescoes by Veronese.

Sets the artists in the context of a wider-ranging survey of Renaissance art.

The second half of the 16th century was a traumatic period for Venice. As an international centre of commerce and publishing it had become a hotbed of religious dissent, ferociously suppressed by the Inquisition. Two years after the Catholic naval victory at Lepanto in 1571, the Venetians lost Cyprus to Islamic expansion in the eastern Mediterranean. Their global dominance in maritime trade was furthermore undermined by the rise of the Atlantic economies. Major fires in 1574 and 1577 destroyed nearly all the paintings by the Bellini brothers, Carpaccio and others in the Doge's Palace. To cap it all, there was a catastrophic plague in 1576 in which about a third of the population died, including the aged Titian.

Titian had dominated Venetian painting for more than half a century. He had formed an unofficial triumvirate along with two Tuscans, the sculptor and architect Jacopo Sansovino and the writer and the proto-journalist Pietro Aretino, both of whom had settled in Venice after the Sack of Rome in 1527. From the 1530s he was court painter to the Hapsburgs, but continued to live and work in Venice. Travelling to Rome for the first time in 1545, he remained responsive to central Italian artistic currents, especially the works of Raphael and Michelangelo. It is during this period that Mannerism became a major current in Venetian art, marked by Vasari's visit in 1541.

Jacopo Tintoretto is often considered a 'mannerist' painter. He rebelled against his master Titian and established a unique and forceful style with roots in Venetian popular culture. Profoundly affected by the religious crisis of his era, he unfurled his fiery genius on one of the greatest biblical cycles in western art, his sublime masterpiece at the Scuola Grande di San Rocco. He had to fight for recognition at first but became principal painter to the Venetian Republic following the death of Titian and then in 1588 of his younger rival, Paolo Veronese.

Veronese, in contrast, was received from his arrival in town in 1551 as the successor to Titian and as the golden boy of Venetian painting. His brightly-coloured, festive compositions decorated the halls of state, the refectories of the major monasteries, private chapels, noble palaces on the Grand Canal and country villas of the Venetian establishment. It is therefore all the more surprising that it was he, and not the more subversive Tintoretto, who was questioned by the Inquisition for the potentially heretical content of one of his major paintings in 1573.

During this tour, we will examine Titian's transition to a darker mode of painting in his 'late style'; the emergence and triumph of Tintoretto, and his rivalry with Veronese; all set against the work of their 'mannerist' contemporaries and in the wider context of the turbulent age in which they lived. We will see all their major masterpieces in Venice and additionally there will be a special excursion to visit Palladio's Villa Barbaro at Maser on the Venetian mainland, decorated by Veronese with one of the greatest of all allegorical fresco cycles. Paradoxically, this era of profound crisis witnessed the final great flourishing of Venetian Renaissance painting.

Itinerary

Day 1. Fly at c. 9.00am (British Airways) from London Heathrow to Venice. Cross the lagoon by motoscafo (water-taxi). Luggage is transported separately by porters. Lunch in the hotel, followed by a visit to the church of San Francesco della Vigna, built in 1534 and designed by Sansovino; altarpieces by Veronese and Bellini.

Day 2. In the morning, visit the Scuola Grande di S. Rocco – the grandest of all confraternity premises, where the halls are decorated with a magnificent cycle of canvasses by Tintoretto. Also see the churches of S. Pantalon, with Veronese's final work (St Pantalon healing a Boy), and S. Rocco, with more paintings by Tintoretto. S. Polo houses one of Tintoretto's animated Last Supper paintings and a Marriage of the Virgin by Veronese. Finally, see the great medieval church of I Frari: Titian's spectacular Assumption is among the many paintings and sculptures with which it is endowed.

Day 3. Spend the morning in the Gallerie dell'Accademia, Venice's major art gallery, where Tintoretto, Titian and Veronese are well represented. In the afternoon visit the church of S. Sebastiano, to again compare works by all three artists, and see another Tintoretto Last Supper in S. Trovaso. The church of S.ta Maria della Salute was built 1631–81 by way of thanks for the deliverance of Venice from the plague and is considered the most important edifice built in Venice in the 17th century, with several works by Titian and Tintoretto's Marriage at Cana in the sacristy.

Day 4. Travel to Tronchetto by vaporetto and from there drive to Maser to see Andrea Palladio's Villa Barbaro. Built for two highly cultivated Venetian brothers, Daniele and Marcantonio Barbaro, it contains Veronese's most important fresco cycle. On returning to Venice, visit the Marciana library at the Museo Correr to see paintings by Tintoretto and Veronese in the reading room.

Day 5. Visit the Palazzo Ducale, supremely beautiful with its 14th-century pink and white revetment outside, and late-Renaissance gilded halls and paintings by Tintoretto and Veronese inside. Tintoretto's Il Paradiso, housed here, is one of the world's largest paintings. In the afternoon cross the bacino to Palladio's beautiful island church of S. Giorgio Maggiore, which contains another Tintoretto Last Supper. Veronese's Marriage at Cana is now in the Louvre in Paris, but was originally commissioned for the refectory here, where there is now a full-scale copy.

Day 6. Today focuses on the church of the Madonna dell'Orto, the burial place of Tintoretto, which also contains two of his laterals as well as the Presentation of the Virgin Mary. Also visit the flamboyant church of the Gesuiti, S.ta Maria Assunta, which houses Tintoretto's Assumption altarpiece and Titian's Martyrdom of St. Lawrence. See more late Titian at S. Salvatore (his Annunciation).

Day 7. Some free time. Travel by motoscafo to Venice airport. Fly to London Heathrow, arriving c. 6.45pm.
